Gironde: its system to get rid of hornets' nests won the gold medal of the Lépine competition

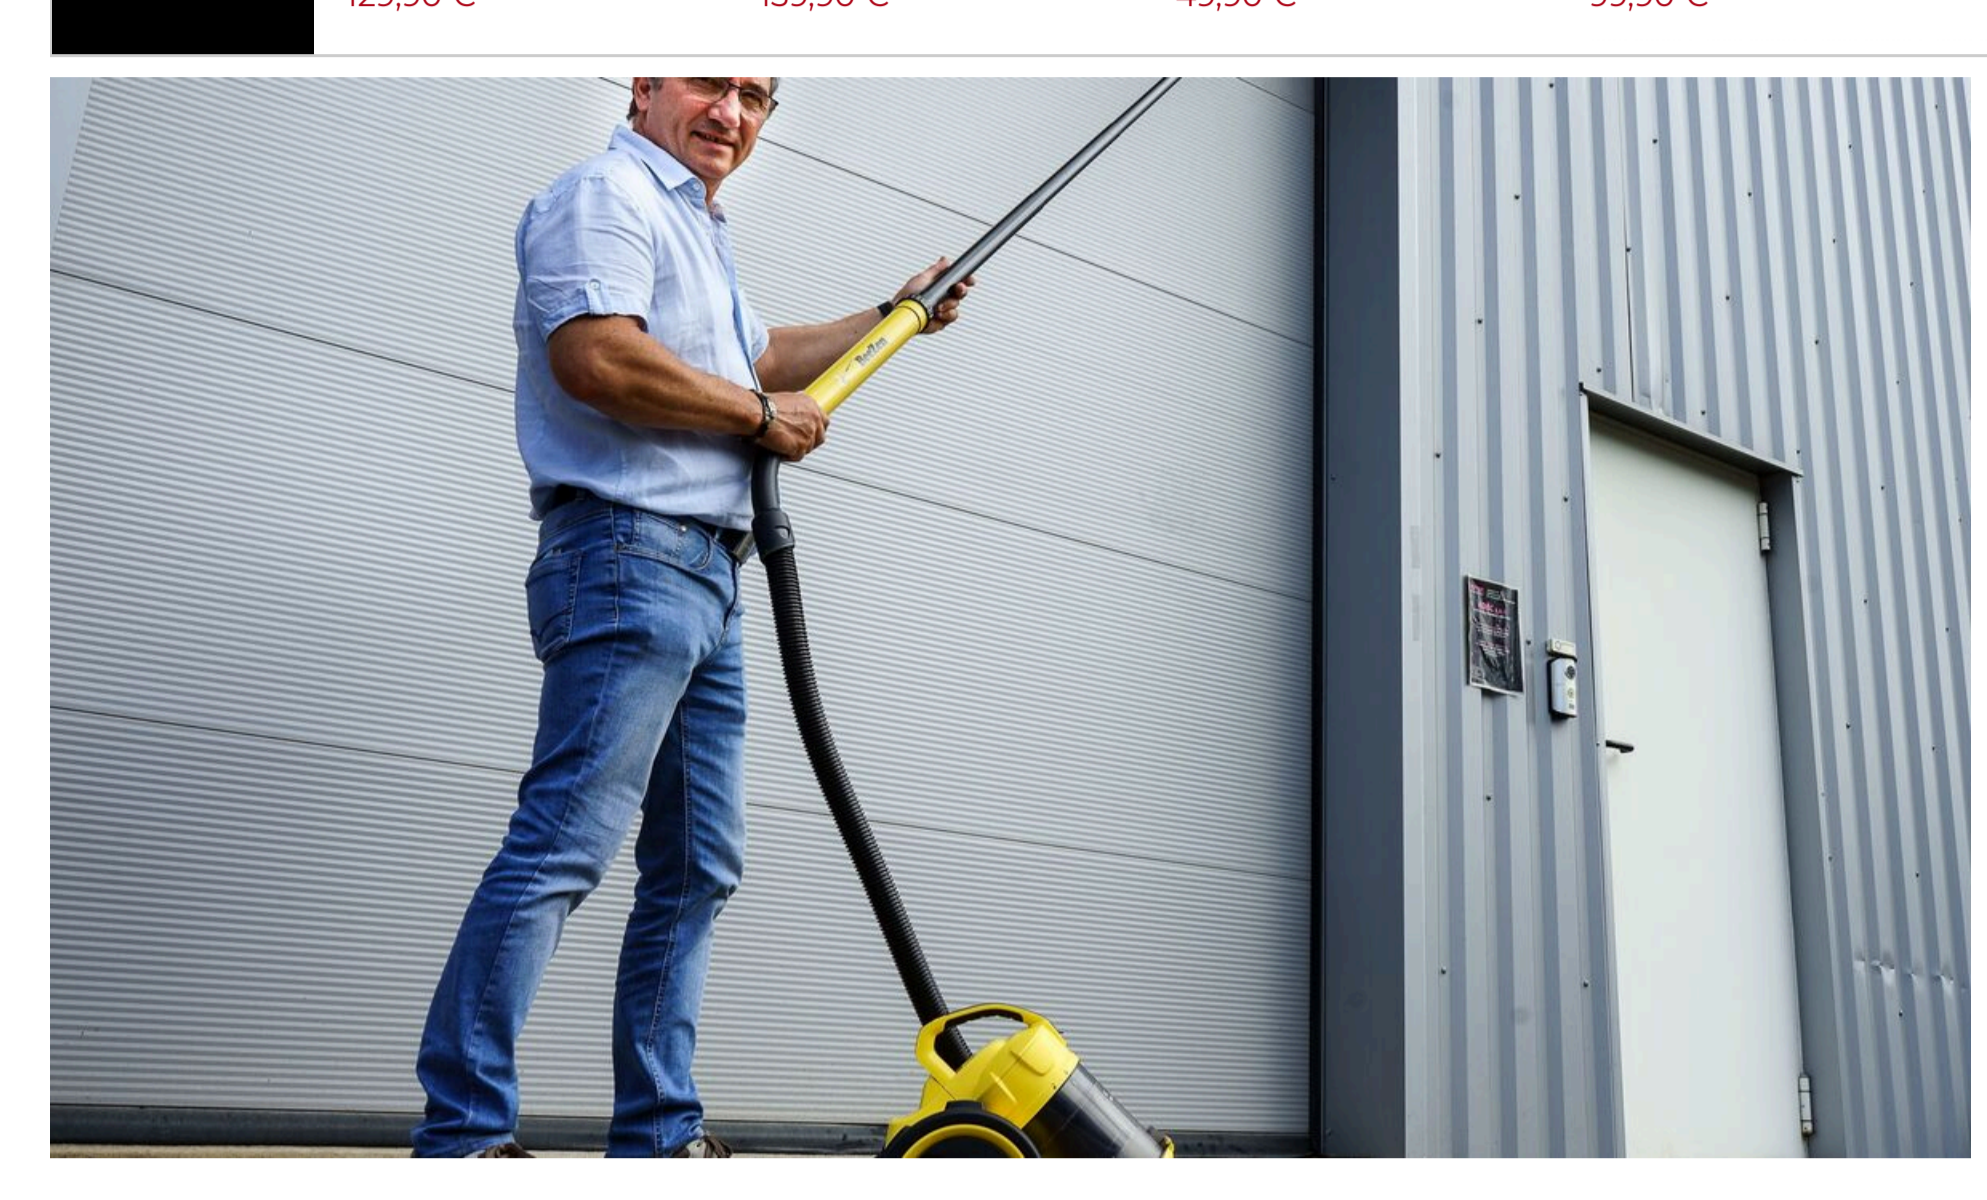

18/08/2023 08:58:21

Highlights: The Girondist Manuel Augusto has developed BeeZen, a telescopic pole that can be connected to a vacuum cleaner to kill hornets. The industrialization of BeeZen will begin within a month or two, pending its distribution in garden centers at a price of 119 euros. Every year, a dozen allergic people die after being bitten. The larva of dead hornet is eaten by the bird which is eaten in turn. The solution is intended for pest professionals as well as individuals, "so that they intervene quickly, when the nest is still small"

The Girondist Manuel Augusto has developed BeeZen, a telescopic pole that can be connected to a vacuum cleaner to kill hornets.

It is a long telescopic pole of 600 g, connected to a household or construction vacuum cleaner, by which eight sharp elements cut the hornets sucked at the entrance of the nest, without stirring up the colony. "A stupid but brilliant invention, I was told at the Lépine competition!" smiles Manuel Augusto, 2023 gold medalist of the prestigious competition.

It had been ten years since the Girondin, an employee of a metallurgy company near Bordeaux, had developed a system "with PVC tubes and sharp elements" to remove the hornets that had settled under his roof. "I wanted to intervene by staying away to avoid the bite and without putting insecticides, because the larva of dead hornet is eaten by the bird which is eaten in turn.

Save bees by eliminating hornets' nests

He took advantage of the confinement to refine his pole, guided by the desire to "save lives", because every year, a dozen allergic people die after being bitten.

For Manuel Augusto, the patented perch also saves bees, which are the main diet of the Asian hornet that participates in their decline. While the Asian hornet was observed for the first time in Lot-et-Garonne in 2004, this invention is a response to the expansion of this invasive insect.

The solution developed in the neighboring department is intended for pest professionals as well as individuals, "so that they intervene quickly, when the nest is still small". The industrialization of BeeZen, "if possible in France" will begin within a month or two, pending its distribution in garden centers at a price of 119 euros.
